A BESTA E O SOBERANO

ISBN 9788564565449

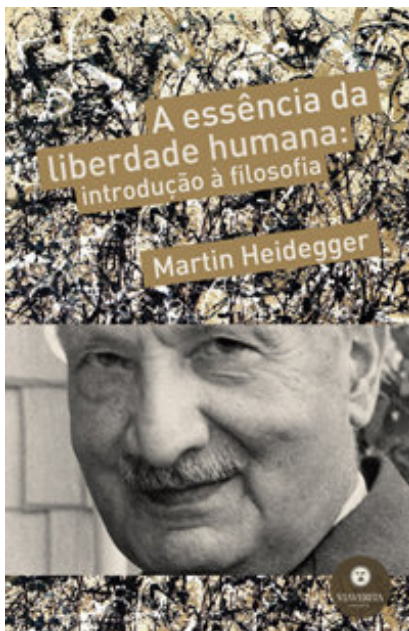

Jacques Derrida

October 2016
492 pages

Jacques Derrida (1930 - 2004) was an important philosopher of the 20th century who was born in El-Biar, Algeria. During the 1960s he initiated the theory of deconstruction in philosophy which deals with a methodology that proposes a particular analysis of texts.

In this seminar, Derrida deconstructs a historical distinction between man and animal.

"The question of the animal was also, here and elsewhere, one of our permanent concerns. The beast, however, is not exactly the animal, and it was only then suddenly, after having chosen that title, the letter of that title, the beast and the sovereign, that I understood at least one of the lines of force or one of the silent connotations, but insistent in what seems to me to impose the very letter, even to my unconscious, to the unconscious of the title, A Besta e o Soberano, that is, the sexual difference marked in the grammar of definite articles."

A ESSÊNCIA DA LIBERDADE HUMANA

ISBN 9788564565067

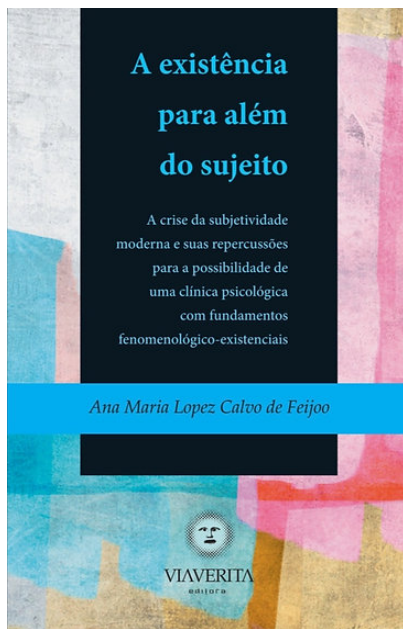

Martin Heidegger

October 2013
348 pages

Martin Heidegger (1889 - 1976) was a German philosopher, writer, university professor and dean. He was an influential thinker of continental tradition and hermeneutical philosophy, and is amply known as "one of the most original and important philosophers of the 20th century".

In this 1931 text that opens the late phase of his work, Heidegger discusses once again with Immanuel Kant the being of man. Thus, the problem of finite reason and the Kantian criticism of dogmatic pretensions of a reason that wishes to be able to know everything beyond any limit arises at first.

The question, for Heidegger, however, lies precisely in the fact that it is not the only reason that is shown as finite, but rather is also more radically human existence itself. Thinking, therefore, appears as an essential trait of the person who dies. A Essência da Liberdade Humana: Introdução à filosofia are expressions that are requested here, because philosophy radically embodies the essence of the freedom of the finite being. Derrida deconstructs the historical distinction between man and animal.

A FALTA QUE MARX NOS FAZ

ISBN 9788564565562

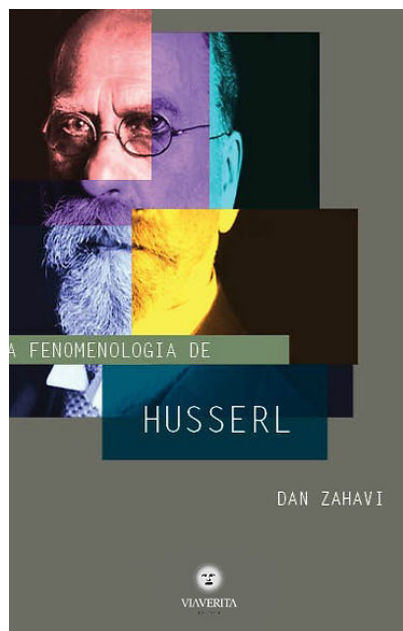

Marco Casanova

March 2017

Marco Antônio Casanova holds a PhD in philosophy from UFRJ/University of Tübingen, Postdoctoral Studies – University of Freiburg, Adjunct Professor of the Department of Philosophy of UERJ, President of the Brazilian Society of Phenomenology. He is the author of several books such as Compreender Heidegger, A persistência da burrice, Eternidade Frágil e Tédio e Tempo.

A falta que Marx nos faz is not a book about Marx, but a book about the contemporary world. Based on the collection of unpublished texts, Marco Casanova seeks to show how much the lack thereof Marx's in our time is not confused with a kind of punctual disinterest in Marxian thought or with an arrogant pretense of victory of the neoliberal ideology, but rather with the obscuring of the critical beacon represented by the figure of Karl Marx throughout the contemporary world. The notion of revolution was not a mere term in the twentieth century, it was a rallying cry and a call to transformation.

Going through themes such as the 'laid époque', such as the maximum incongruity of contemporary avidity for growth above all and all, such as the resurgence of religious fundamentalism, the book seeks to rescue the caustic vein of a thought committed to combating all forms of alienation and conformism.

She was professor of graphic expression at the Faculty of Architecture and Urbanism of Federal University of Rio de Janeiro.

A laborious attempt to uncover the origin of what I have experienced in recent times and which has resulted in a painful and prolonged change in the consciousness of my being in the world. Whatever outcome it may have, this is a story of hope.

Of belief in the possibility of a rebirth, of a reintegration into the flow of life, from which I felt for a long time apart, as if only a part of me were inserted in the continuity of the real, while the other struggled, adrift, what was familiar made unattainable by an irremediable impossibility of apprehension of what once grounded me.

A MEMÓRIA NA ANTIGUIDADE

ISBN 9788564565241

Izabela Bocayura

January 2015
122 pages

Izabela Aquino Bocayura is a graduate (1988), Master (1992) and Doctor (1999), of Philosophy at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro. Her current research is to discern in the beginnings of philosophy, in Plato, the decisive elements capable of having established, in the face of other discursive modalities, philosophy as an entirely other way of structuring the discourse, but also of modulating a way of perceiving reality, but also of behaving in front of everything and everyone.

The ancients had a very intense relationship with memory, so intense that they didn't even have to record it materially. The oral tradition and the festive celebrations were, for a long time, enough to account for the entertaining of the culture. The poet's voice, which made heroic deeds perennial, immortalizing the beautiful gestures was an indelible mark of antiquity.

Wouldn't we have much to learn from the ancients? Over time, the memorable, rather than the noblest, became the most insignificant moment. The memory today is eminently of the record of the data, but a record that runs over itself in its own uproar. This is not about demonizing our time, but the contact with the ancients and their relationship with memory provides us with a healthy situation of questioning ourselves.

BANALIDADE DE HEIDEGGER

ISBN 9788564565555

Jean-Luc Nancy

May 2017
94 pages

Jean-Luc Nancy is a French philosopher who was born in 1940 in Bordeaux. His works are marked by the large variety of publications and the heterogeneity of the themes dealt with. Nancy is currently professor emeritus at the University of Strasbourg.

Jean-Luc Nancy seeks to read the newly published Heideggerian texts, the famous "Black Notebooks", as well as antisemitism and even Heideggerian anti-Christianity from a recognition of the banality of a traditional interpretive key, characterized precisely by the vision of the decay of the beginning and the promise of a future capable of solving the dilemmas of time.

With this, Heidegger appears from a new perspective. Banal not because of a foolish antisemitism, but rather because of an attempt of epochal analysis of the Judeo-Christian origin of our world.

Ângela Carneiro's play 'Como se foi um crime' is rare among many others in Brazilian dramaturgy, because it has a simple, moving plot, which holds the reader's attention from beginning to end like a good policeman and because it works like a theater play would: intended for the stage.

The two main characters become old acquaintances of the reader, not to mention that they could be the readers themselves, in their desires, in their contradictions and in the faithful way to the feelings with which they face life. The publication of this play plays a great role in the dissemination and propagation of true Brazilian theater.

COMPAIXÃO E REVOLTA

July 2021
173 pages

Alexandre Marques Cabral is an adjunct professor at the Department of Philosophy at Uerj and professor of Philosophy at the Instituto Federal Colégio Pedro II. He works in the areas of metaphysics, philosophy of religion, mysticism, phenomenology, medieval thought, Heidegger and Nietzsche.

The transforming power of compassion is directly linked to the denaturalization of suffering. As Alexandre Cabral shows in 'Compaixão e revolta', suffering is not pain. Pains happen in the fabric of life of beings who somehow experience the contours of their finitude, even if it is only through displeasure and fear.

Suffering, however, is something else. Cabral points out that suffering is never 'natural', which is why it must be answered accordingly. Now, not only human beings suffer. The living, in general, are liable to suffering. Therefore, being questioned by suffering is a condition for a set of actions to be undertaken with a view to favoring the singular sufferer and the network of existence, in which the living exist. It is compassion that allows not only to come into contact with the unnaturalness of suffering, but also to reject its perpetuation. Revolt, in turn, is the attitude opened by compassion: in the face of wicked suffering, revolt appears as a structural way of resisting the naturalization of iniquity.

Invited professor of latu sensu specialization courses: Specialization in Phenomenological and Hermeneutic Psychology of the Dasein Institute and Specialization in Phenomenological and Existential Psychology at USCS.

Art requires a completely particular attention from us. There is no way to simply go through a work of art and move on without a kind of unusual presence. Art requires attention. Clinic too.

Thus, starting from heideggerian hermeneutic phenomenology as a link, Maíra Clini follows the full spectrum of relations between art and clinic and the type of common requisition that is made in each of these areas. From this comes a new perspective of thinking about the therapeutic encounter and the possibilities of carrying out the therapy.

She has experience in the history of the Americas, with emphasis on Latin America in the 19th century.

In the context of the construction of the Chilean and Argentine states, in the mid-nineteenth century, the border areas known as the Araucania, the Pampas and Patagonia were commonly described by the Criollo authorities as "desert" or situated regions "on the margins of civilization", as they constituted spaces for the exercise of sovereignty of different indigenous groups, unrelated to this jurisdiction.

All this allowed sometimes contradictory modes of consideration of the character of these groups. The main objective of this book is to follow in a thorough and analytical way the passage from an image of the Indians as heroes to an image of the Indians as criminals.

"It has been forgotten that theater is a sacred act that involves both those who see it and those who perform it, and that the fundamental psychological idea of theater is this: that a gesture that is seen and that the spirit reconstructs in an image is worth as much as a gesture made.

This is why, as an instrument of revolution, there is nothing better than the theater; and through it, through this dissolving and formidable weapon, every shrewd revolutionary government directs and secures its revolution."

ETERNIDADE FRÁGIL

ISBN 9788564565135

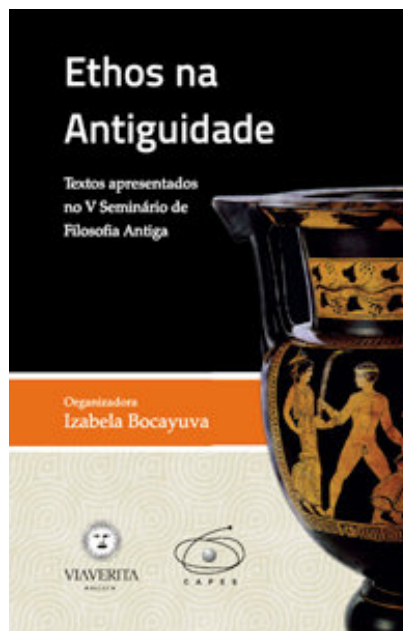

Marco Antônio Casanova

March 2013
430 pages

'Eternidade frágil' is a book that seeks to think about the impact of the notion of instant on the possibilities of understanding artistic phenomena in general. For a moment, what is understood is the opposite of the mere fleeting succession of "nows" or moments, which always leave one another at an increasingly dizzying speed.

The instant points in the direction of an experience full of time, of a reconciliation between time and eternity. To describe this experience, Marco Casanova goes through the relationship between philosophy of art and philosophy of history, the epochal character of contemporary nihilism, as well as the place of modern art in the description of our current condition. The result of this movement is a clash with tradition, to the same extent that an opening of new potentialities of our time.

Marco Antônio Casanova holds a PhD in philosophy from UFRJ/University of Tübingen, Postdoctoral Studies – University of Freiburg, Adjunct Professor of the Department of Philosophy of UERJ, President of the Brazilian Society of Phenomenology. He is the author of several books such as Compreender Heidegger, A persistência da burrice, Eternidade Frágil e Tédio e Tempo.

'Existência e transitoriedade' is a work thought out from the need to break with the prevailing paradigms of understanding existential disorders in psychology, psychiatry and psychoanalysis, paradigms that are marked first of all by the primacy of subjectivity as an element of structuring all our experiences in general.

Starting from a question about the way of being of the human being, the book exposes transience as the originating character of all our possibilities of being, to the same extent that it describes identity as a derived and restrictive phenomenon, derived from forms of organization of space, time and body.

Marco Antônio Casanova holds a PhD in philosophy from UFRJ/University of Tübingen, Postdoctoral Studies – University of Freiburg, Adjunct Professor of the Department of Philosophy of UERJ, President of the Brazilian Society of Phenomenology. The book 'Experiências abissais' revolves around a series of texts on philosophy and deconstruction. Starting from a discussion with Levinas and Derrida in three moments (From existence to infinity: essays on Emmanuel Levinas; Derrida and the labyrinth of inscriptions; and For a damp thought: philosophy from Jacques Derrida), the book migrates to a discussion with contemporary themes such as issues of gender, sexuality, coloniality, and its intrinsic relationship with Western rationality.

The result is a delightful journey into the intricacies of a complex and transformed world.

If phenomenology is a type of knowledge that deals with the significance of phenomena and if every phenomenon has a relative autonomy, since its field of meaning is not narcissistically imposed by human subjectivity, then what was convinced to be called in the West mystical experience has the right to be in this tradition of thought.

Although mystique was initially considered a specific type of theology, as it appears in Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita, it beckons to an irreducible experience to theoretical-analytical reason, as well as to practical-operative rationalities. It is a fruitive experience of mystery.

Phenomenological thinking has proved to be fruitful in Psychology since its inception. However, it is today that, given the limitations inherent to the metaphysics of Psychology, it reveals its great potential to break with essentialisms and determinisms.

The seven lectures that make up this publication present foundations and illustrations of this new scientific paradigm.

It is precisely against this recurrent way of thinking the philosophical Hermeneutics that the work in question develops.

Much more pretentious, the book's proposal invites us to enter and go through the richness of the foundations of Rogerian theory: how the eminent American author appropriates various scientific and academic knowledge during the course of his long career; how it builds its constellation of concepts; revisits them and develops them, thus demarcating a broad understanding of human experience.

'Heidegger em Bultmann' is not a book about the influence of one of the greatest names in contemporary philosophy on the work of one of the greatest names in contemporary Protestant theology.

Although Bultmann has appropriated the existentials present in the analysis of the being-there (Dasein) present in Being and Time to perform his known biblical exegesis of clearly existential character, it is in the development of the method of demythologization of biblical narratives that we can better understand how Heidegger is found in Bultmann's work.

It is, in fact, a creative appropriation of the essential intentions of phenomenological destruction thought by Heidegger in Being and Time (§6) and developed in part of his work.

IDEIAS SOBRE UMA PSICOLOGIA DESCRITIVA E ANALÍTICA

Wilhelm Dilthey

November 2011
152 pages

'Ideias sobre uma psicologia descritiva e analítica' is certainly one of the foundation books of the contemporary world and at the same time the result of a radical clash with our risks and possibilities. In this book, Wilhelm Dilthey seeks to show how the sciences of nature are not the only sciences and cannot be the fundamental ones.

In addition to them, the sciences of the spirit (human sciences) appear as precisely linked to historical life and marked by the fact that they do not construct anything explanatorily, but analyze the expressions of human life in its structural connection with historical life. Therefore, the psychology at stake in the sciences of the spirit could only be a descriptive and analytical psychology.

Wilhelm Christian Ludwig Dilthey (1833 – 1911) was a German hermeneutic philosopher, psychologist, historian, sociologist and pedagogue who was born in Wiesbaden. Dilthey taught philosophy at the University of Berlin.

Edmund Husserl

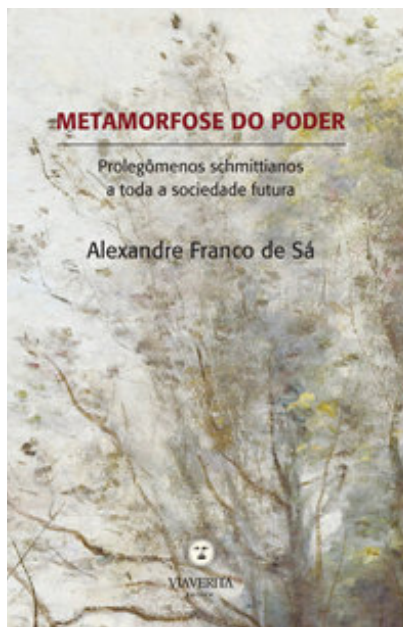

June 2012
246 pages

Edited by 20th century icons Edith Stein and Martin Heidegger, Lições para uma fenomenologia da consciência interna do tempo presents the main lines of Husserlian's thesis that the essence of human consciousness is time.

Starting from a consideration about the need for retention and pretension for the constitution of identity behaviors in general, we have the opportunity in the text to follow the place of memory, perception and imagination in the very constitution of the experiential syntheses that determine us in our being.

Time, therefore, appears here not as a quantifiable mark of our actions, but as the proper element of our existential experiences in general.

Edmund Gustav Albrecht Husserl (1859 - 1938) was a German mathematician and philosopher who established the school of phenomenology. He broke with the positivist orientation of the science and philosophy of his time. He elaborated criticisms of historicism and psychologism in logic.

The work Nathan highlights one of the central problems in the relationship between modernity and religion, namely, the issue of respect for religious diversity. With the rise of reason to the dignity of the altar, the enlightened questioning of religious wars has become inevitable: how to accept as reasonable that wars are legitimized, fostered and produced by religious disagreements.

This question is accompanied by another equally important one: if the religions that most foment religious wars within Western civilization are the religions of the book (Judaism, Christianity and Islam) and if they, in different ways, defend unconditional love, justice between people and universal peace, how it is possible to accept them producing wars, hatred and religious intolerance? How can one accept its practices of violence that become evident signs of contradiction.

Gotthold Ephraim Lessing (1729 - 1781) was a German poet, playwright, philosopher and art critic, considered one of the greatest representatives of the Enlightenment, known also for his criticism of anti-Semitism and defense of free thought and religious tolerance.

Nietzsche's letters are indices of moments of thought. In them, in different ways, life is expressed polysetically. Therefore, philosophy breaks with logocentric forms of self-exposure and celebrates irreducible possibilities to the order of reasons. It is, above all, a possibility of philosophical doing where the intensity of the flows of meaning for oneself and for the world speak louder than the metric of logical narratives.

Therefore, the bio-graphic character of the Nietzschean stolarity does not refer only to Mr. Nietzsche, but to another form of life (bios) writing (graphein) the signs and traces of itself. For those who want to immerse themselves in the traits of the Nietzschean philosophical life, it is essential to know and to be contaminated by his epistolary.

Friedrich Nietzsche was a German philosopher who wrote several texts criticizing religion, morals, contemporary culture, philosophy and science, displaying a predilection for metaphor, irony and aphorism.

Lou Andreas von Salomé was a Russian-born psychoanalyst. His diverse intellectual interests led to friendships with a wide range of distinguished thinkers, including Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Paul Rée and Rainer Maria Rilke.

This book is more than a simple collection of letters exchanged by two of the most important figures for the shape of contemporary imagination. With an introduction and translation by Marco Casanova and a selection of other important documents to accompany the love triangle lived by Nietzsche, Lou and Paul Rée, what we have here is a rich set of correspondences, memories of life, aphorisms written with mutual inspiration, diary notes etc.

All this material tells us, on the other hand, not just about the particular relationship between Nietzsche and Lou, but rather about the dilemmas of existence, the mismatches of solitude, the yearnings for listening, the uncertainties and insecurities of a human world, all too human. The book works as a unique entryway into their universe of thought.

Scattered around the room were about thirty women, divided into small groups. They held their champagne flutes – 'comme il faut' – by the very thin Baccarat crystal handles. Most did not see her enter. The others, with the exception of the lady of the house, pretended not to have seen it.

- "Heavens, she came... Wow, she looks awful with that dark chocolate scarf around her neck... Disguise... Disguise... Oh God, don't let her come here", they said softly, in a kind of prayer, the excitement contained by good manners.

The most daring ones slipped away towards the sweets table set up at the back of the room. Calories were low at the moment. To keep her away from the little group, they would even make promises.

Gestalt therapy is constructed as a therapeutic perspective marked by a radical questioning of the therapy of mere words, of therapy conceived from the primacy of the head over the body.

With this, it is faced with the need to think of a method capable of recovering the complexity of the field and existential relationships. In O afeto e o afetar, what is seen is an attempt to think about this complexity from the two-way street of affective relationships; and this not only in the face to face of the individual clinic, but in group dynamics.

Dorothee Bärge is a psychologist, specialized in industrial and organizational psychology at the University of Applied Psychology in Zurich.

There are no previous solutions to the problems of existing, nor a script to be followed in advance. The worst thing you can do in situations of grief is to prescribe to the grieving how he needs to live his grief so that it makes sense to others.

And it is precisely here that this powerful little book, O cultivo da vida, comes into play. What it intends is not to function as a method of existential analysis, but as a nod to the attention needed not to condemn life in advance nor to transform the affirmation of life into a new prison. As expressed in the book's subtitle, crisis and suffering are existential challenges that place existence before its truth and prepare it for direct processes of vital growth.

Jesus Manuel Antonio Monroy Lopez

August 2014
171 pages

The Catholic priest Jesus Manuel Antonio Monroy Lopez served as a professor at the Diocesan Seminary of Nossa Senhora Rosa Mística in Nova Friburgo. He was professor and director of the theological school of the diocese of Nova Friburgo in Macae from 1999 to 2005. He is a doctoral student in Theology at Puc in Rio de Janeiro since 2016.

The death of God is not simply an exhibition of disbelief by a particular individual named Friedrich Nietzsche. It is much more the explanation of a contemporary condition, of an unavoidable impossibility of thinking anything from a metaphysical plane of eternal and immutable essences.

Thinking about the consequences of this condition for the religious experience in general is the task imposed by the book O discurso religioso após a morte de Deus, a breathtaking work that is part of the impasses faced by those who today still surrender to the possibility of the sacred.

O HINO DE HÖLDERLIN

Martin Heidegger

January 2017
213 pages

Martin Heidegger (1889 - 1976) was a German philosopher, writer, university professor and dean. He was an influential thinker of continental tradition and hermeneutical philosophy, and is amply known as "one of the most original and important philosophers of the 20th century".

In O hino de Hölderlin, Martin Heidegger seeks to think precisely the possibilities of dealing with tradition in the midst of considering the end of metaphysics. As the first beginning of philosophizing comes to an end, another beginning of thinking emerges, another beginning that functions as a space of alterity and divergence, as well as resistance to absorption in epochal metaphysics.

Hoelderlin appears in this context as the poet of the other beginning, as the one who retains the creative force of tradition and protects it as a force so that the initiality itself is not lost. Remembrance, here, is a term to designate precisely the maximum devotion of poetic thinking, its original relationship with the vital powers of human experience.

Daniel Lins practices writing/thinking, that is itself intoxicated and, in this way, surrendering to his own creative excess, to the promises and adventures of the universe that lies ahead. Daniel Lins tells us about the "virtual/actual experience of alcohol, under the sign of a nomadic despair.

Lucas Francis e Silva Ong

June 2015
180 pages

Lucas Francis e Silva Ong is a psychologist graduated, master and doctoral student at the Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo.

This book is primarily dedicated to anyone interested in phenomenology and the study of drugs. Here the reader will find a lively and rigorous phenomenology. Lucas Ong carefully traces the entire philosophical path of phenomenology, from its origin to its maximum concretization, in what is still hardly studied by psychologists-phenomenologists and is better known in the field of philosophy as the late thought of Heidegger.

The book goes much further than that, as it launches a phenomenological investigation from the entirety of Heidegger's work, that is, it permeates the Analytics of Dasein culminating in the discussion of the Appropriating Event. This work brings what most singularizes phenomenological thinking: the destruction of the hegemony of technical knowledge, that which only knows how to calculate and nothing else.

João Augusto Pompeia graduated in Psychology from PUC-SP and currently stands out as a psychotherapy thinker based on the phenomenological approach.

The psychologist Bilê Tatit Sapienza is one of the references of Brazilian Daseinsanalyse, contributing with her reflective works on the impersonal daily life, the psychotherapeutic practices with a phenomenological-hermeneutic approach.

In Os dois nascimentos do homem, the authors present an extensive dialogue with central themes of therapy and education in the contemporary world.

The book's starting point is certainly the Heideggerian idea of the human being-there as an entity marked by its own existential determinations. In any case, the great quality of the text lies in not being stuck to the Heideggerian conceptual language, but in always dealing with problems with ease, without any insertion of a hermetic and closed language.

The book O tempo da medicina seeks to combat the problems inherent to contemporary medicine through a radical resumption of its essentially hermeneutic character.

Thus, the subtitle 'medical narratives: from the existential place of the physician to the historical tensions of medicine' indicates precisely how much medicine is not only constructed from a spatio-temporal arrangement of what happens in the always extraordinary encounter between the I and the you, but it also needs to deal constitutively with the historical determinations that are characteristic of all human phenomena in general. Carlos Pompilio's book, therefore, leads us to reflect on the dilemmas of medical action in the time that can be called today without fear of "the time of medicine".

Carlos Pompilio holds a bachelor's degree in Medicine from the University of São Paulo and a PhD in Medicine (Pathological Anatomy) from the University of São Paulo. He is currently an assistant physician at the Hospital das Clínicas, Faculty of Medicine, University of São Paulo.

This book is an invitation for a reading of the German philosopher. The book contains three parts. The Introduction concerns the Heideggerian notion of "clearing", redescribed by Sloterdijk in order to receive his concept of anthropotechnics. The understanding of the "clearing" calls for the investigation of two fields, that of subjectivity and that of society, articulated to the notion of modern (and post-modern) individuality.

In Part I, it is about understanding subjectivity in its double condition. In Part II, what we have is the investigation of society in its processes of exemption and, therefore, again, of its effects in the subjective field. In Part III, the task of investigating forms of subjectivity and individuality that are able to aspire to freedom in a clearly utopian situation of a more generous society.

Psychiatrist and philosopher Thomas Fuchs has as his research areas the intersection of phenomenology, psychopathology and cognitive neuroscience, with a main emphasis on corporeality, enactivism, temporality and intersubjectivity.

The situation of the schizophrenic is similar to that of a man who, without realizing it, has been placed in a foreign land and no longer understands the language of his surroundings: he will not only perceive the expressions and gestures of his neighbors more intensely, but above all the enigmatic ones significantly of the "contraption", which as it were by itself seems to be linked with him, because he is not able to unravel it and, thereby, neutralize it.

Thus, the loss of the intentional connection of meaning with the perceived cannot leave anything "neutral" behind: where perception itself no longer aims at objects, things must conversely "aim" at, glimpsing, and interpellating the perceiver.

In this book, Alexandre Sá presents several works in which he analyzes several Schmittian themes, highlighting the discussion about the supposed inconsistency and opportunism that would have marked Schmitt's work, according to Löwith's canonical interpretation, which is convincingly rejected by the Portuguese professor.

Throughout the work, Alexandre Sá reconstructs Carl Schmitt's arguments in the light of the original texts and contexts, always bearing in mind the entire Schmittian corpus.

In the end, he concludes that the German jurist would have been a great fiction writer, since he used "pretend" theoretical structures to create something that is not given, but that, as a device, can only be imagined.

The psychological clinic always runs the risk of decay, whether in the form of a conduction of conduct, or in the form of a psychologization of socio-historical-political situations. This is because it traditionally starts from subjectivity as a subsistence to be cared for.

But what if care is the most fundamental and constitutive of what has come to be called subjectivity? This was the experimentation of ancient philosophy in the forms of self-care and self-constitution. The clue to a reconnection of clinical care with this notion can be followed by the reader in this book.

Cristine Mattar is a doctor in psychology and is interested in the interfaces between Psychology, History of Brazil, Modes of Subjectivation in Brazil, Suffering, Clinic, Arts and Brazilian Literature. An equally decisive one speaks aloud: the character of the world as a shared space, as a space of coexistence, of coexistence between human beings-there. Dealing with this element in the context of group therapy is the great discovery of Ana Tereza Camasmie's book and its most fundamental strength.

Thinking about group therapy within the scope of Heidegger's philosophy is not, as we discovered in the midst of reading his text, but going to the heart of Heidegger's most specific intentions and, following a formulation by Binswanger in his text "Psychopathology as a pathology of space", thinking about therapy from the space of coexistence and not the other way around. Camasmie's book, therefore, rescues group psychotherapy and reveals potential already apparently lost in it.

Ana Tereza has a PhD in Psychology from the Fluminense Federal University and a Master in Philosophy from the Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo, Clinical Psychologist from the State University of Rio de Janeiro.

He specializes in the philosophy of Friedrich Nietzsche. His research focuses on the area of Modern and Contemporary Philosophy, with an emphasis on History of Philosophy, Ethics and Philosophy of Law.

Resentment is not considered by Nietzsche only as an individual possibility of dealing with a setback, a failure, a setback of fate, but also and mainly as a force, a structuring perspective, an interpretive principle that regulates bodies within our tradition. Judeo-Christian.

It is here, then, in a masterful reading of a plural range of Nietzschean texts, that Oswaldo Giacoia Junior inscribes his physiopsychology of resentment. In the midst of an accompaniment of the many voices articulated by Nietzsche to think about the relationship between resentment, morals, will, body and life, just to mention some of the key themes of the text, Giacoia takes us to the heart of this fundamental affection, which takes shape in the second volume of our collection. A text that was born classic.

Sartre and politics. This has been a central theme of Sartrean thought since its beginning. In Being and Nothingness, Sartre paid attention to the dilemmas of an existence confronted with the original alienation of being and with the problems of a field of relations with others always marked by mutual movements of objectification.

This horizon of problems reappears later in The Critique of Dialectical Reason, a text in which the political question and the maximum commitment of intellectuals come to the fore. In Sartre and Politics, therefore, renowned researchers discuss Sartre's place in the impasses of the contemporary world.

Martin Heidegger (1889 - 1976) was a german philosopher, writer, university professor and dean. He was an influential thinker of continental tradition and hermeneutical philosophy, and is amply known as "one of the most original and important philophers of the 20th century".

In the years between 1959 and 1969, the Swiss psychiatrist Medard Boss invited Martin Heidegger eleven times to the town of Zollikon, by Lake Zurich, to develop the so-called "Daseinsanalyse" there in private seminars. Heidegger took the opportunity, starting from Being and Time, to put his reflections on "Dasein" to the test in an immediate contact with psychiatrists, psychotherapists and psychoanalysts.

Issues related to temporality, spatiality and the vital corporeality of "Dasein" were discussed, as well as emerging cybernetics and its influence on psychology. Thus, os Seminários de Zollikon emerged: a philosophy text radically focused on the interface between reflection on human existence and the understanding of the central elements of psychic suffering.

Hans Kelsen was an Austrian jurist and philosopher. In the West, especially in European and Latin American countries, he is considered one of the most important and influential scholars of Law.

In Sobre a teoria das ficções jurídicas, Hans Kelsen establishes the first elements of his legal thought. Starting from Vaihinger's theory of 'as if', Kelsen seeks to show how the law does not prescribe to people how they should be, but what their rights and duties are when they see themselves subsumed in a legal category.

With this, he removes from the law its pedagogical and moral role of formation and reinforces responsibility as a central factor of the legal system in general. Thus, one of the most immediate understandings of the so-called legal positivism is born.

Ludwig Binswanger was a pioneer Swiss psychiatrist in the field of phenomenological-existential psychology. He is one of the creators of Daseinsanalysis.

In Sonho e Existência, Ludwig Binswanger presents the foundations of his existential anthropology, while paving the way that leads him from psychoanalysis to Daseinsanalysis. On the one hand, this path passes through an encounter between Binswanger and Husserlian phenomenology and Martin Heidegger's hermeneutic phenomenology.

Thus, little by little, we have the opportunity to follow in the book the impacts of the phenomenological project for the understanding and treatment of existential disorders, as well as the exposition of a series of central ideas of the Binswangerian therapeutic concept such as: escape towards ideas, own world and shared world, love, life story among others. The persistence in maintaining the Prohibitionist posture (Say No to Drugs), even with its immense financial investment, brought with it even greater problems than what was intended to end. Instead of reducing risky drug use and addiction, the prohibitionist strategy based on the binomial of abstinence and hospitalization treatment only increased violence (trafficking) and the lack of open and scientific dialogue. This book, through a deconstructive-constructive method of Existential Phenomenology, presents a new way of understanding the complex relationship of Man - drugs-world.

The work presents an innovative proposal: Vulnerability Reducing Actions. This book is suitable not only for professionals who work directly in the drug industry, but also for the general public (parents, teachers, etc.).

Viver não é preciso launches the challenge of thinking differently about a theme that has been present throughout the history of humanity, a topic that has been approached in many different ways by philosophers, sociologists, by medical knowledge, literature, cinema and by the everyday speech, because, in one way or another, it affects us all.

Diogo thematizes the knowledge and discourses that throughout history have been built around the theme of suicide. This historical perspective allows us to problematize and denaturalize the way, today hegemonic, of thinking about it.
